Eureka Luto Organs,

The most Perfect and Beautiful in the World.

THE HIGHEST PREMIUM OVER ALL OTHERS, GOLD AND SILVER MEDAL, HAS BEEN AWARDED TO US FOR THE BEST ORGANS AND MELODEONS, AT

THE FOLLOWING STATE FAIRS: NEW ENGLAND, (SIX STATES,) OHIO, NEW JERSEY AND IOWA; ALSO, 10 FIRST PREMIUMS AT OTHER FAIRS.

This style is new, and embraces the most good qualities and style of case, of any Musical Instrument now made. After many improvements they have now reached that degree of perfection in construction and the moderate cost, that brings them within the reach of all. The amount of musical power these Instruments possess, the purity and beauty of their tone, and the great variety of effect which can be produced on them, is wonderful. The highest musical authorities of the land pronounce them superior to all others, as the best Instruments of their class in the world.

Brass and Brass Workers.

When the traveler alights for the first time from the cars at Waterbury, Connecticut, and steps upon the platform of the depot, he hears a sound he never heard before. Through the hissing of steam, the rattle of brakes and clatter feet, there comes to his wondering ears cla-a-ang—a deep bass sound, tapering off in a low contralto. Scarcely have his ears attained that perpendicularity supposed to be expressive of intentest listening, when cla-a-ang—it comes again, this time from another direction. Looking up the track, the mysterious clangor assails him from a mass of great brick structures; looking down the track it assails him from another mass of great brick structures. Musing and mystified, he gets into a waiting hack and is driven to the hotel; but the clangor rides behind his carriage as Dark Care sat behind the horseman, and as he emerges and mounts the steps of the Scovill House, the last sound that reaches him ere he passes the threshold is cla-a-ang. Is it a haunted city? he wonders. Has Vulcan set up a forge in the great hills that surround it? Or have Hendrick Hudson and his gruesome crew taken to playing bowls in this pleasant valley of the Naugatuck?

Presently his solicitude is relieved. He is told that it is only Brass, an explanation with which, for the moment, he is compelled to content himself. "Brass," he knows, makes a good deal of noise in the world, but he never heard of its making a noise like this. This clangor is the voice of Waterbury, and it is heard from one end of the Union to the other. It is not musical to the common ear; but to the people of that lovely little city it is as sweet as the strains of "The Mother's Prayer" dropping from Ole Bull's violin. Surely, the body with such a voice must be worth seeing.

Brass is the life of Waterbury; but for it the city would be no city, and its name would cover a feeble and straggling village. Naturally, the people respect brass. Brass the material is meant; not brass the ideal. For, though the great poet says that "men's evil manners live in brass," this is not true of Waterbury, where manners are silvern rather than brazen. So much material brass, it would seem, enables the inhabitants of Waterbury to dispense with the ideal and more popular article, and, in consequence, they constitute a community in which modesty seems to be regarded as a real virtue, and not a trumpet blows for individual laudation. What is not made of brass here it would be easier to tell than what is. You hear it, smell it, see it, feel it everywhere: in the button on your military cap, in the burner of your lamp, in the pin which you stick in your collar; the stairs of your hotels and public buildings are plated with it; your chair is mended with it; Bridget in the kitchen pushes her clumsy needle with it; it is the Brazen Age in Waterbury.

And here is a good place for saying a word of deserved eulogy upon this city and its people, so far as their characteristics can be appreciated during a brief acquaintance with them. A neater, more orderly, and in all respects agreeable city, does not exist in all New England. Nature has done much for it in the gift of two pretty streams—the Naugatuck and the Mad—that dart through the valley where it lies; but the public spirit of its people has done more. To the latter are due the well-kept streets, the handsome public buildings, the cosy park rescued from the damp destiny of an alder-swamp, the lofty, spreading trees that shade its thoroughfares, the Cemetery, so alluring in its simple, neatly rural beauty, that one almost longs to lie down in it and be at rest beneath the shimmering leaves, and amid the rustle of flowers, and the song of birds, and the water works, built last year, at a cost of nearly $200,000. One accounts for this unusual public spirit mainly by the fact that the factories—which constitute the wealth of the place—are almost wholly owned by residents, who feel a personal pride in the welfare and beauty of their city. How all this beauty and comfort and solid prosperity have been rolled out of brass, we shall try to show.

Waterbury lies on the Naugatuck river, and on the Hartford, Providence, and Fishkill Railroad. It is distant about 33 miles from Hartford, 94 from New York, and—this latter remoteness constituting its principal disadvantage—about 160 from “the Hub.” It numbers 15,000 souls, and a busier, happier community is nowhere gathered within municipal limits. It is a child, 212 years old, by the way, of Farmington, Conn. In 1657 some adventurous Farmingtonians wandered off to seek their fortunes, and perhaps to found an empire. Halting near the site of Waterbury, they decided to remain, but they reckoned without their Indians, for these gentry were so sedulous in their attentions, that the colonists could not render an adequate return. So they moved across the river, and established their household gods about the spot where now a handsome brown stone City Hall rears its imposing front. But they did not thrive very well. They were simple farming folks, dependent on Mother Earth for sustenance and employment; brass foundries and copper stocks were unknown in those days. But Mother Earth did not treat them very well. The soil was poor, and they knew not how to improve it. But, with true Yankee pluck, they toiled along, year after year, making “both ends meet” only by a vigorous final jerk. They grew little in number and none in wealth. At the end of a hundred years their descendants were hardly better off than themselves. Until within sixty years the poverty of Waterbury was a proverb: “poor as Waterbury,” said her more fortunate neighbors, half-pitiful, half-derisive.

Waterbury, more truly than any other community, may affirm, “on Fortune’s cap we are the very button.” She has sprung from a button. Her coat of arms should be a bouton d’or. But for buttons she would have no brass; and but for brass the proverb, “poor as Waterbury,” might have been current to this day. Who made the first button in the town is yet an open question, and probably will always remain open.

In 1811 there came on the stage a man who, for half a century, was one of Waterbury’s most active, able, and honored citizens. A man of large intelligence, shrewd foresight, and comprehensive views, he thoroughly appreciated the resources and needs of his town; he saw that her only road to success lay through manufactures. His name was James M. L. Scovill. In 1811 he, his brother, W. H. Scovill, Frederick Leavenworth, and David Hayden began the manufacture of gilt buttons. They bought an old mill property, and thereby hangs a tale.

In the deed of conveyance from the town, or the original proprietors, there was a stipulation that a public grist mill should always be maintained on the property. Years passed away after the purchase, the business of the Scovills and their partners had reached enormous proportions, and where once a rude little mill ground the scanty grists of the neighboring farmers, rose immense structures of brick, crammed with machinery and noisy with the voice of steam and the clangor of metals. The former existence of a grist-mill on this spot was as generally forgotten as was the fact that Lieutenant Ard Welton had made guns in the town three quarters of a century before. But suddenly, on the information of certain old gentlemen with a liking for litigation and antiquarian investigations, the owners of this great manufacturing establishment were summoned into court, charged with a breach of the covenant in their deed, by which they were bound to maintain a public grist-mill. The whole community was amazed and alarmed; what could the Scovills do, they wondered; would they have to give up the property, or would they escape with a heavy pecuniary mulct? The public suspense was not long. Mr. Scovill (J. M. L.) promptly came into court, and made answer that they had always maintained a public grist-mill, in accordance with the covenant on the deed, and if the public had any grists to grind they had only to bring them to the mill. Then accompanying the old gentleman who had instigated the action, and certain representatives of the town, to the great shops, he had a piece of the flooring lifted up, and showed them a pair of mill-stones in perfect order, and ready to run upon demand.

The six great mills of Waterbury produce nearly the same goods. All make sheet and platers' brass, German silver, wire and tubing of brass, copper and German silver. The Scovill Company, the Benedict & Burnham Company, Holmes, Booth & Hayden, and the Holmes, Booth & Atwood Company manufacture lamp burners and trimmings. The Waterbury Brass Company and Brown Brothers make brass kettles. Holmes, Booth & Hayden, the Benedict & Burnham Company, the Waterbury Brass Company, and Holmes, Booth & Atwood make copper rivets and burs. The Scovill Company, alone of the six, make buttons, and Holmes Booth & Hayden of the same number, alone make silver ware. The Benedict & Burnham and Scovill Companies make piano-forte, ship and wrought brass butt hinges. Brown Brothers and the Scovill Company make plated and German silver thimbles. Besides these there are a thousand and one articles of brass made by smaller firms and corporations in Waterbury, of which mention will be made hereafter. Brown Brothers are mainly engaged in turning out the raw material, brass, for other manufacturers, though their product of brass kettles is immense, and they make thimbles enough to fit out all the "anxious and aimless" feminine superfluities in the Union. The Benedict & Burnham Manufacturing Company were the earliest manufacturers of German silver, and have made more of this metal than all other manufacturers in the country. The Scovill Company, though extensive manufacturers of all the various articles enumerated above, give special attention to buttons.

In 1811, as has been stated, the Scovills, Leavenworths and Hayden began the manufacture of gilt buttons under the style of Leavenworth, Hayden & Co. In the preceding year, 1810, water power was employed for the first time in this business. It was still a small business, and was prosecuted under circumstances that were full of discouragement. Nobody in Waterbury thoroughly understood the process of gilding, and it was not until some skilled workmen had been imported from England that really good buttons could be made. There were no facilities for rolling brass in the town, and indeed none in the country. For several years these Waterbury pioneers used to send their brass to Litchfield to have it rolled in an iron mill. J. M. L. Scovill went upon an errand of this kind, one winter, and met with a laughable accident. On his return he had an awkward piece of freight in the shape of a copper "still," inside which, for the sake of convenience, he took his stand. On his homeward journey the sled was overturned down a steep bank; the "still" fell off and tumbled down the declivity with startling speed; but Scovill, wisely judging that the copper could stand the thumps and bumps better than he could, sturdily kept his place, and after a meteoric trip, the "still" was checked in its mad career, and the involuntary engineer crawled out in safety. He might have appropriately warbled in his transit, if the song had been written at that time, "Still so gently o'er me stealing."

There is another name prominent and honored in the annals of Waterbury, that should have mention here. Aaron Benedict made buttons of bone in 1812, and since that year he has been identified with most of the great manufacturing enterprises that have prospered in Waterbury. In 1823, with some associates, he began to make gilt buttons, and the fame of the town as the seat of button manufacture may be said to date from that year. He brought workmen from England, and in 1824 turned out $5,000 worth of goods, which was an enormous product for those days. In 1825 the firm rolled a little brass for their own use—the first, it is said, that was ever rolled in Waterbury. Getting courage from these successes, they made new ventures, and in 1829 they made brass for sale. From that day the manufacture of brass in Waterbury has grown steadily and rapidly. Now the city is the principal seat of this industry in the United States. It has six firms, who turn out nearly $6,000,000 worth of brass per year, five of them using 1,000,000 pounds of copper each. The importance of this interest is forcibly expressed in the statement that Waterbury uses in the manufacture of brass one-tenth of the entire copper product of the United States. In 1834 the firm of Benedict & Burnham was formed, with a capital of $40,000; in 1840 the Benedict & Burnham Manufacturing Company was organized, with a capital of $100,000, which was increased in 1856 to $400,000.

Going back to the Scovills, we find that in 1856 they were doing business under the name of J. M. L. & W. H. Scovill. They rapidly enlarged their sphere of action, and kept well abreast of Deacon Bededict in the race of progress. They, too, made and rolled brass, and made buttons, increasing their product year after year. In 1842 they began to make daguerreotype plates, of which, until that kind of pictures was virtually superseded by photographs, they turned out an immense quantity. In 1850 the Scovill Manufacturing Company was organized on the joint stock plan, with a capital of $350,000, and since that time has carried on an enormous business in the manufacture of brass, German silver, buttons, &c., &c., as will appear more particularly hereafter.

There is a third name that completes the trio of gentlemen who may be said to have founded the prosperity of Waterbury—Israel Holmes. This gentleman is still living, and at the age seventy odd is doing work enough to break down half a dozen ordinary men. He is esteemed the best living authority on all questions relating to brass manufacture in America, and if the people of Waterbury had not been shrewd enough to elect him to the Legislature, thus doubling and complicating his responsibilities and labors, so that his time was too valuable to be thrown away, this sketch of Waterbury and its industries would have been far fuller in historical details and important facts. Mr. Holmes was one of the first, if not the first, to bring over skilled workers in brass from England. The mission to that country was attended with many difficulties and even dangers, arising from the unwillingness of English manufacturers to permit the barbarians of America to acquire a knowledge of the useful arts. The story is current in Waterbury that the noble British wrath was so fierce against him when his object in visiting that country was discovered, that he had to have himself shipped on board a vessel packed in a hogshead, to escape their persistent hospitalities. But Mr. Holmes repudiates the hogshead, and says that the demonstrations against him were merely attempts to revive certain obsolete laws designed to prevent the emigration of skilled mechanics from England. All his long life Mr. Holmes has been engaged in the brass business. As the head for many years of the great firm of Holmes, Booth & Hayden, he has become widely known, and exerted a powerful influence in this department of manufacture. Recently he has retired from the above named firm—or rather company—and is now the principal partner in a new concern, Holmes, Booth & Atwood, who are erecting extensive brass works at Waterbury, and carry on others in other Connecticut towns.

The other heavy brass manufacturing concerns now in operation in Waterbury, besides those already mentioned, are Brown Brothers and the Waterbury Brass Company. The first named firm, composed of four brothers, was organized in 1851, with a capital of $200,000. One of the partners, Philo Brown, has been engaged in the business 35 years. This concern gives employment to 250 hands. The Waterbury Brass Company was established in 1845, has a capital of $400,000, and employs 150 hands. The Scovill Manufacturing Company, employ 350 to 400 hands; the Benedict & Burnham Manufacturing Company 200 to 250, and Holmes, Booth & Hayden, 500 to 600 hands.
